KLYERENCE:

Memorandum from Director, Office of Intelligence Resources and Coordination, Department of State, dated 20 January

1958

1. This branch is interested in consumer expenditures and communer welfare in the UBSR. Both social security and social insurance expenditures in the Soviet budget affect consumer welfare. At present we have little information on the distribution and financing of these expenditures. Certain parts of these funds directly affect health and education, subjects for which this branch is responsible. A major part of social insurance is financed as a deduction from wages, constituting a "consumer expenditure" amounting to six to seven percent of the USSR's wage bill. Our interest in the USSR's system lies in the extent and types of coverage and the flow of funds rather than in methods of processing data. The possibility exists that information on population and the labor force in different sectors of the Soviet economy may be derived from such information.
